Dr. Sacher is a staff medical oncologist at the Princess Margaret Cancer Centre and an associate professor in the Departments of Medicine & Immunology at the University of Toronto. Dr. Sacher's research focuses on novel targeted and immunotherapeutics including immune checkpoint inhibitors, personalized vaccines, direct KRAS inhibitors and adoptive cell therapy. His lab seeks to understand mechanisms of resistance to immune checkpoint inhibitors with a focus on the role of novel unconventional innate-like T cells. He also has a particular interest in the immunobiology of KRAS mutant tumors and immunotherapeutic strategies to address oncogene addicted cancers.

TITLE: Novel Immunotherapeutics and Immunobiology of Non-Small Cell Lung Cancer
